

CYBERCRIME CASE STUDY (CYBERBULLYING)

In recent years , I have realised that the same screens that help us stay connected also have a very scary side called cyberbullying . This crime is much more than just mean comments. It is a way to hurt someone on purpose over and over again using internet on various platforms. In India, this often starts when someone breaks a person's trust. A common example is when a student shares a private photo with their partner or someone whom they trust, but then that person uses the photo as a weapon after they break up. They starts threatening that they will share their photo and once they share in any group it starts spreading quickly on various social media apps.

Recently, we are also seeing a scary rise in AI “deepfakes” on social media. People do not even need a real photo anymore, they can simply use AI to put a victim's face onto a fake, explicit video. These digital traps move so fast that the victim feels helpless before they even know what is happening.

While anyone can be a target, young women are often the major targets and the one who are majorly affected. The results are terrible, leading to bad stress. This also becoming one of the major reasons for suicidal cases. In our country, what people think of us is very important, so being bullied online can make a person feel like their life is over. Staying silent only helps the bully so in order to protect each other we must report any such things . Also its very important to be alert and never trust someone blindly.
